ABSTRACT

A method for printing images using light black ink. The method sets a first and second threshold determined by an intensity value of the light black ink relative to standard black ink. The method then determines a gray component density value for a pixel, calculates a black generation value based upon the first and second thresholds and then generates values for other colors dependent upon the black generation value.